MURDER OF BUTLER HELPS SOME LIGHT ON IT. THROW

Theory That Bolts Drop Eight Stories on Non-Union Men by Accident-Company Not Subject to Penalty for Delay on a Building It Is Putting Up for Itself.

In the case of Coroner Acritelli, whose philosophy on the impropriety of going near Sam Parks iron worker when he feels murderous has attracted some notice since his investigation of the murder of Michael Butler on the Plaza building began, there developed yesterday some contradictions of the statement given to THE SUN by the Coroner on the day before. In seeking to develop the fact that the Fuller company had been guilty of conspiracy in sending Special Policemen Butler, O'Toole and Cullen to the eighth floor of the Plaza building Coroner Acritelli stated that the construction company was behind in its contracts and had deliberately attempted to force a strike and thus save penalties for tardiness under the exemption clause allowing overtime in case of strike contingencies. Officers of the Fuller concern remarked for instance, that the George A. Fuller Company is itself chief owner of the new Plaza building and is, consequently, under no contract whatsoever, save with the United States Realty Company, of which concern it is a part. The United States Realty Company owns a three-quarter interest in the building. The George A. Fuller Company, as a corporate part of consequently, not liable to impose a penalty upon itself for delay in the erection of one of its own buildings. It is pointed out by the legal advisers of the George A. Fuller Company that the construction firm would suffer through a strike and that any dissatisfaction on the part of the union men working on its building would entail loss. The Fuller concern sought out union labor in the first place and had to gain the permission of the Allied Iron Trades Association before laborers of the Housesmiths and Bridgemen's Union

Supt. Norris in charge of the construction work on the Plaza building, contradicts Coroner Acritelli's assertion that the previous record of assaults by union men upon non-union laborers working in the Plaza structure did not justify the employment of the three watchmen to keep watch over the union men on the top floors. He said vesteriate.

the union men on the top floors. He said yesterday:

"Two weeks before the murder of Butler and immediately after the coming of the non-union men to work on the lighter iron work on the lower floors bolts, T-joints, boards and hammers began to fall through the iron work from the upper stories. One man was hit by a rivet while standing near President Sterritt of the Fuller company; his assailant was arrested and later jumped his bail. Things got so bad that a week before Butler was killed I posted a notice to the effect that if any man was caught dropping bolts or other matters from the upper stories he would be discharged.

"There were four men te my knowledge beaten in the cellar by union men, after being sent there by a union man upstairs to "see the superintendent" about getting a job. These men were all strangers to me and I consequently do not know their names. The non-union men came to me and complained that they were afraid of being killed. Then I bired the three special policemen.

"It is ridiculous to say the special policemen didn't know what they had to do, and were ignorant of the danger they were running into. When L hired them I told them they would go up against a tough set of men. They had done the same sort of job before and knew what kind of men they had to deal with."

Coroner Acritelli hopes that his position in the matter of the inquiry into Rutler's death will not be misunderstood. He doesn't care to have it appear that he is trying to cover up a murder.

"Now, about those falling bolts." he explains with suavity, "you know that often the man below who tends to the hoisting of the steel girders forgets to slip a bolt into the ends when he gives the signal to hoist. Result is that when the beam gets up to its place the two men there can't make it solid in its place. So they call below for a bolt and one is thrown to them. They are only standing on a small space and sometimes, of course, they miss the bolt. Then the bolt

Coroner Acritelli concluded his preliminary examination of witnesses yesterday morning with the taking of testimony from two members of the union. One of the union witnesses, who was wanted earlier in union witnesses, who was wanted earlier in the examination, but who went fishing, re-turned yesterday and was subpœnaed for the inquest set for Tuesday.

LIVE TOPICS ABOUT TOWN.

When the Adams Express Company got the cable order for a highly certificated gallon of Mississippi River water to be used at the christening of the Duke and Duchess of Manchester's child much surprise was expressed, because the Duchess and her father, Eugene Zimmerman, are Cincinnati people. "I wondered why they didn't get the christening water from the Ohio River," said a prominent officer of the Adams Express Company, "and I looked up Mr. Zimmerman's early career. I ascertained that in the civil war he was Lieutenant-Commander of a gunboat that had a little brush with the Confederates north of Vicksburg. Since it was from that part of the river that the water was ordered to be taken, I have come to the conclusion that Mr. Zimmerman designated the Mississippi River water as a token of a union between the American navy and British royalty." expressed, because the Duchess and her Vestrymen in a number of New York churches are complaining of the number of counterfeit coins found in the collection boxes nowadays. Time was when a piece of bad money in the contribution box was a curiosity. Persons who were unfortunate enough to get stuck with spurious coins enough to get stuck with spurious coins took good care not to pass them off on the church. Whether they are less conscientious now or less able to detect the character of the change they handle is a question. Churchmen hesitate to suspect the congregation of saving up counterfeit dimes, quarters and half dollars for the collection plate as the easiest way to discharging their church duties and at the same time getting rid of bad money, but with all their charitable intentions there are those counterfeit coins to be explained away somehow.

Strangers in the Criminal Courts Building often get a shock when an elevator for which they have been waiting for some time passes them without stopping. The elevator operator makes no sign to show that he even noticed any one was waiting for him. "That's a fine way to run elevators in a public building," fumes the stranger.

The stranger probably noticed that there The stranger probably noticed that there were two men—a Judge and his attendant—in the elevator as it shot past him. When the elevator returns the operator, if he is in good humor, explains that he couldn't stop because he had a Judge for a passenger. If he isn't in good humor he makes no explanation; but the stranger has his kick.

"I wonder," he storms, "if these elevators, aid for by the tayrayers, were not here as paid for by the taxpayers, were put here as private cars for the Judges or for the genera public."

The Judges have never made a rule that no one is to be allowed on the elevators while they are in them. It is a rule made by the attendants of the Judges and the eleva-

A colored parson living in Harlem bought bicycle recently. Being a man of considerable avoirdupois, he experienced some difficulty in learning how to ride. Pedalling through a side street one evening just at dusk, he met with an accident. The front dusk, he met with an accident. The front wheel of the bicycle struck a loose stone and the parson took a header over the handlebars. He landed on his face on the sidewalk and came falling into an areaway in which the janitor's little boy was at play. The boy gave a startled look at the oncoming intruder and yelled out:

"Say, maw, the coal has came!"

The compound word in its description of social functions has been declared to be no lorger smart and should be shunned just now as much as it was cultivated a few years ago. "I have prepared a sentence for my daughter," said a matron, "in order that she may know what to avoid in her conversation:

" 'Always take a picture-hat to a week-end house-party at a country-house, for there may be a dinner-company to be followed by a box-party.' I have told her to bear these words in mind and she will be able to avoid one bad style at least."

New York is not to hear Mme. Calve after all next year. She will remain in Paris. Probably she will appear only a few times abroad and regrets that she is not to be seen here as much as her admirers do. The famous French woman was engaged under a provisional contract. In case a certain number of guarantees had been received before a fixed date she was to return here for another tour. It was not found possible to arrange these concerts and Mme. Calvé's manager notified her that it would be the part of wisdom to postpone the tour until some future date. Mme. Calvé had made her plans to return here and wanted to do it, so her communications to her American managers are extrapolar vivagious for two or three were extremely vivacious for two or three days after she learned the news. Cable-grams flashed across the ocean hourly and one of these consisted of 300 words. Such extravagance on the part of a French prima donna betokens deep emotion of

The custom of serving tea in the offices of the heads of prominent banking houses at the close of banking hours has spread rapidly in the Wall Street district. The custom is of English origin and was first introduced by the New York houses of London banking firms. Subsequently it ists without him. It was expected that was taken up by some of the younger was taken up by some of the younger bankers who had spent much time in London, and now tea and wafers are regularly served every afternoon in the private offices of many a large institution. An interesting feature of the spread of the custom is its adoption by the head of a prominent department of one of the largest banks. This banker is an Irishman and his assistants are Germans, yet all gather at a fixed hour every afternoon and sip their tea as contentedly as if such beverages as Irish whiskey and Pilsner had never been inwhiskey and Pilsner had never been in

It was at an outdoor restaurant several miles from Broadway that the New York man and his fair guest were having an al fresco meal. The cooling drink was served with the customary rapidity, but the rest of the meal was a lorg time comirg. After half an hour had passed the man called the negro waiter and expostulated. The negro was apologetic. "In jes' a minute, boss, in jes' a minute; it's comin' alor g fine." After another long wait, just as the man was about to rise in his wrath and leave, the negro rushed in and placed the platter on the table with a flourish. It was fried chicken and done to delight the soul of an

"What was the trouble, Charlie?" asked the guest.

The negro grinned. "I tell you, boss, it done took some time to catch dat chicken."

"If anybody doubts the emancipation of the modern girl just let him walk down some street where sporting bulletins are shown between 4 and 5 o'clock in the afternoon, and he will mighty soon change his mind. There are crowds of women abroad at that time who seem almost as much interested in the baseball and racing news interested in the baseball and racing news as the men. They are nice, proper looking girls, too. There is one Broadway drug store that has become the favorite haunt of these athletic young women. LIVELY NIGHT IN CENTRAL PARK FOR BINGHAM'S SQUAD.

Park Cops Vainly Call on Commissioner's Men to Stop-Woman Offers Her Jewels as Ball for One Offender-Night Bank Saves Him-Each Speeder Fined $10.

Police Commissioner Bingham's automobile and a squad of automobile chasers got busy in Central Park and thereabouts late on Friday night and as a result four speeders were arraigned in the Yorkville police court yesterday. The Commissioner had received information that certain automobilists went through the park nights at such reckless pace that they endangered other vehicles as well as themselves. The mounted policemen and the bike cops were unable to catch the speeders.

The Commissioner thought that perhaps his machine, which can make fifty miles an hour, would be able to accomplish something. So Detectives Benjamin Mallon, Law and Scanlon were instructed to cruis about the park. Policeman William Leitch, Gen. Bingham's expert operator, had charge

It was after 10 o'clock when the squad started up Broadway toward the park. All hands were in plain garb. At Fortyseventh street a big machine passed them at a fast clip, headed uptown. Mallon got out his stopwatch as his car trailed behind and timed the machine ahead for two blocks. He decided that it was going at the rate of twenty-five miles an hou and was increasing its speed.

The police tried to overhaul the speeder but couldn't catch up. The two soon covered the distance along Broadway to Fifty-ninth street and there they entered the park. There were two men and two women in the first car. They did not know at the time that the men in the car behind were policemen but they managed to keep a good distance ahead as they sped up the West Drive.

Each time Leitch increased his speed the other car put on more power until they were going about thirty miles an hour. The ordinary park policemen shouted to both machines to slow up but the request was not heeded. It was not until the chase had reached 110th street that the police car overtook the other one and arrested the operator, William Fickling, a manufacturer of 154 East Fifty-seventh street, who owned the car. He was taken to the West 100th street station and bailed street, who owned the car. He was taken to the West 100th street station and bailed for appearance in court.

The policemen went back to the park and loitered near the entrance at Fifty-ninth street. In a short time a big automobile in which were a man and five women came along and took the West Drive up town. The time was twenty miles an hour, according to Mallon's stop watch, so the police started out on another chase. This one ended at a point opposite Eighty-first street, where the speeder was overtaken and escorted to the West 100th street station.

Sergt. Andy Devery, brother of Big Bill, was behind the desk and took the pedigree of the operator, Robert Crawford, a commission merchant, who lives at 300 Central Park West. He was told that $100 security was wanted for his appearance in court. But he didn't happen to have so much cash about him, nor did his companions.

The women had gone into the station and one of them removed a diamond ring from her finger and diamond rings from her ears, and offered to leave them and other jewelry on deposit.

"These may be real diamonds and worth all you say, lady, but I'm no expert and can't take them for bail," said the sergeant.

"I have it. The Day and Night Bank is just the thing to save me from being locked up," said Crawford.

He got the money and was let go.

It was now midnight and the police again went to the park and saw two automobiles speeding along the West Drive at a rate of twenty-five miles an hour. There were five women and a man in each car. The men were arrested without much trouble. One of them was Charles C. Valentine, dry goods merchant, who lives at 101 West Eighty-fifth street. The other was Patrick J. Dealey, also in the dry goods business, who lives at 1126 Hudson boulevard, Jersey City."
